PREFACE.

It has already been noted in this Souvenir that each legislative session is made memorable for something entirely unlike each and every other session. That of 1903 was no exception to the rule. It was made memorable by the dedication of the monument to Maj. Gen. Joseph Hooker upon the State House grounds; by the death of four members of the House while that body was still in session, and by one on the day after prorogation; by an investigation into charges of alleged bribery in connection with legislation in 1902; and by the suspension of two senators for refusing to obey a direct order of that body. Indeed, there were "strenuous" days before the final hour was reached. And yet the legislative work was done with intelligence enough to reject a larger proportion than usual of the proposed changes in legislation. There was also the thorough investigation into the supply and distribution of coal, resulting from the coal famine of the previous fall, which resulted in the passage of the bill to license coal dealers, although a bill from the same committee, to prevent "combinations", was defeated. The session was also in marked contrast to that of 1902 in that not even once did either branch receive some distinguished guest to whom a general reception was given by the members. Never before, however, did any legislature receive so many vetoes from the Governor, not even in the days of Gov. Butler, when there was constant friction between the Executive and Legislative departments of State These vetoes, 14 in all, were all sustained by an average large majority and besides these, the Governor allowed five bills to become law without approving them with his signature. The remaining two mural paintings have been placed in Memorial Hall, and will be a source of continual pleasure and delight, aside from their historic associations, to the thousands who look upon them each year. On page 101 will be found a fine representation of the unveiling of the statue to Gen. Hooker, June 25, This Souvenir is presented by the editor with the assurance that it will continually give pleasure and satisfaction to those who possess it.

HOUSE READING ROOM AND POST OFFICE.

DORIC HALL.

This hall has seen varied gatherings, but none of greater interest than that of April 17, 1861. On that day, the first volunteer company of the whole country, during the late War of the Rebellion, assembled here, chose its officers, received overcoats from the government and in an hour and a half from the time of assembling was on it way to the front. The story, in more detail, is as follows: In Cambridge, in 1860, had been formed a company of "Wide Awakes" to help elect President Lincoln. Hon. J. M. S. Williams, congressman from that district, promised them that if they would keep up their organization they could go to Washington to see Lincoln inaugurated. But the United States government forbade the assembling of such bodies at the national capital. During the dark days of February, 1861, several of the company agreed to volunter if they were needed, and, on the 14th of February, several of them signed an agreement to that effect. First on the list was the name of John Kinnear now first clerk of Sergeant-at-Arms. In the first week in March, he, with a few others, visited the State House and personally tendered their services to Governor Andrew. He advised them that there was no immediate need of their services and that they return to Cambridge, whence he would summon them if necessary. Then came the news of the breaking out of rebellion. They at once visited the State House, finding Governor and Council in session. Governor Andrew told them to return to Cambridge and that they would receive orders in an hour. They returned and the orders speedily reached them. Then, again, they hastened to the State House, many of their members leaving their work and throwing their tools into the street. Reaching the State House, they assembled in Doric Hall, ninety-seven of them. In a small adjoining room they chose officers, electing James Prentice Richardson, now of Texas, as captain. They first went to the Old Colony station, but were soon ordered to the "S. R. Spaulding," where they embarked for Fortress Monroe. They were first assigned to the Fifth regiment, but were soon transferred to the Third, becoming Company C. This was, without doubt, the first volunteer company of the Rebellion. It is a matter of history that this prompt, loyal and general response of this company, in contrast with the scattering returns from more pretentious organizations, did much to encourage the State authorities and "the great war Governor."

In this hall lay, in state, the body of Charles Sumner, Sunday, March 15, 1874, where it was viewed by a multitude as vast as time would allow.

In this hall gathered the "Army of the Unemployed," February 20, 1894, whence they were removed by detachments of the district and Boston police, but without violence They had just been addressed on the Capitol steps by Governor Greenhalge.

This view is taken from the main entrance and shows the statues of Washington and John A. Andrew in the distance.

JAMES OTIS IN DEFENCE OF THE PEOPLE.

This painting represents James Otis arguing before the Superior Court of Massachusetts in February, 1761, in the Council Chamber of the old Town House in Boston against the "Writs of Assistance." The painter of this picture was Robert Reid. The painting is eight feet by ten and is on the north wall of the "Marble Staircase." (Half-tone from photograph by N. L. MEMORIAL HALL.

The Battle Flags of the various Regiments that served in the Civil War are here gathered in niches enclosed with glass. In other niches are bronze and marble statues of Governors who were more or less directly connected, by being in office during those years, with the building of the present State House. The Hall itself is surrounded with huge monoliths of Sienna marble, while the gallery is of the same material, the whole making what is said to be the most costly Hall of its kind in the country.

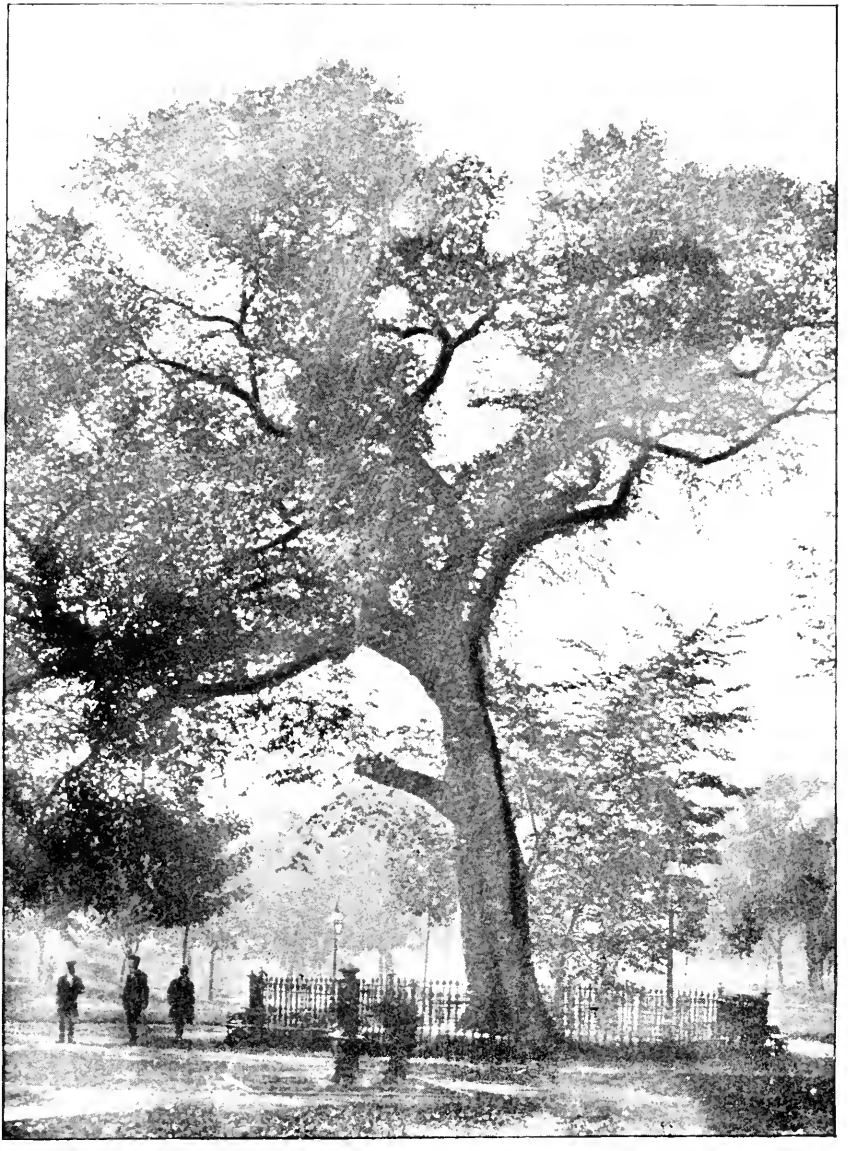
THE OLD SOUTH MEETING-HOUSE.

Built in 1730, on the lot of Gov. John Winthrop, corner of Milk and Washington streets, and dedicated in April of the same year. On November 27, 1773, here was held the meeting at which it was resolved that the English tea should not be landed; and on December 16 here was held the meeting, with 7,000 people attending, before the pouring of the tea into Boston harbor by the Sons of Liberty, disguised as Mohawk Indians. Here Warren spoke in March, 1775, three months before he was killed at the battle of Bunker Hill. In the siege of Boston it was used as a riding-school by the British. Its external appearance has not been changed for 150 years. No religious services have been held here since 1872. Now occupied by a loan collection of Revolutionary and other relics, the admission fees going to the preservation fund.

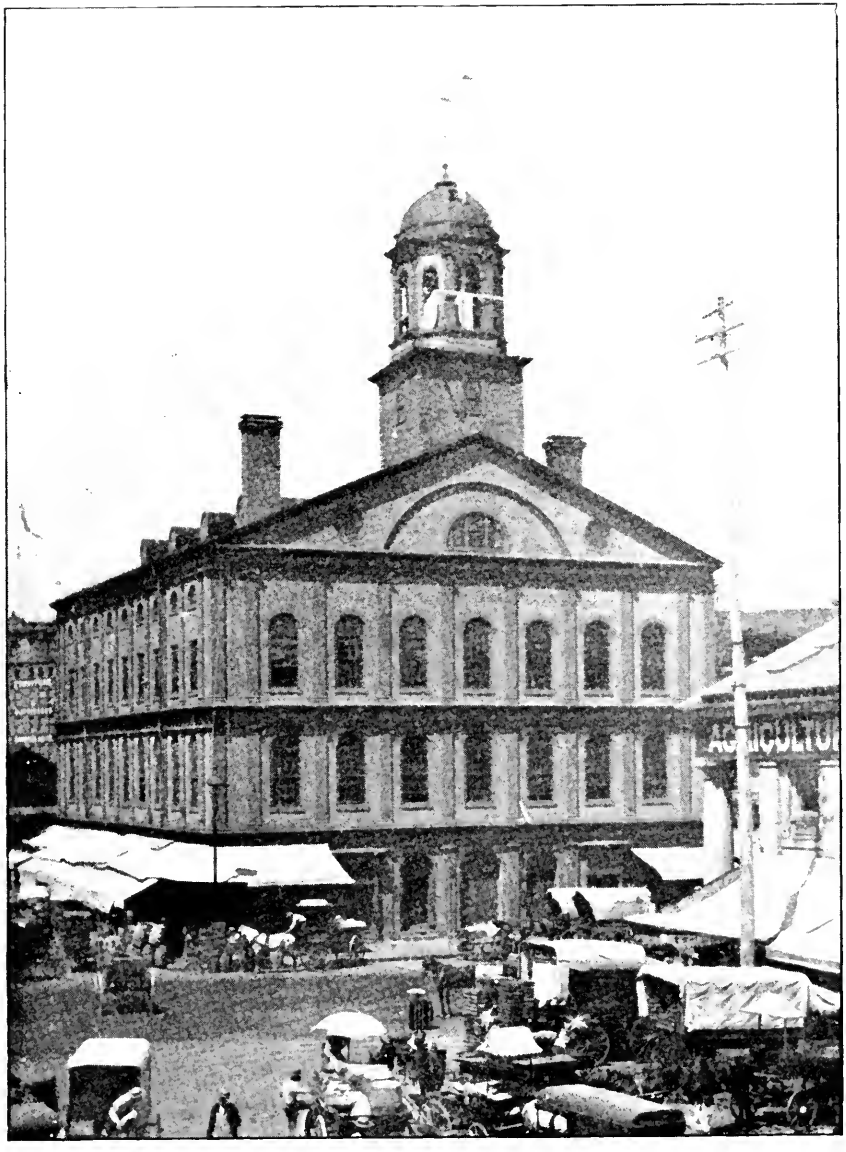


THE OLD ELM, BOSTON COMMON.

(The following inscriptions on the tablets adjoining the present young and thrifty elm briefly state the main facts of interest):

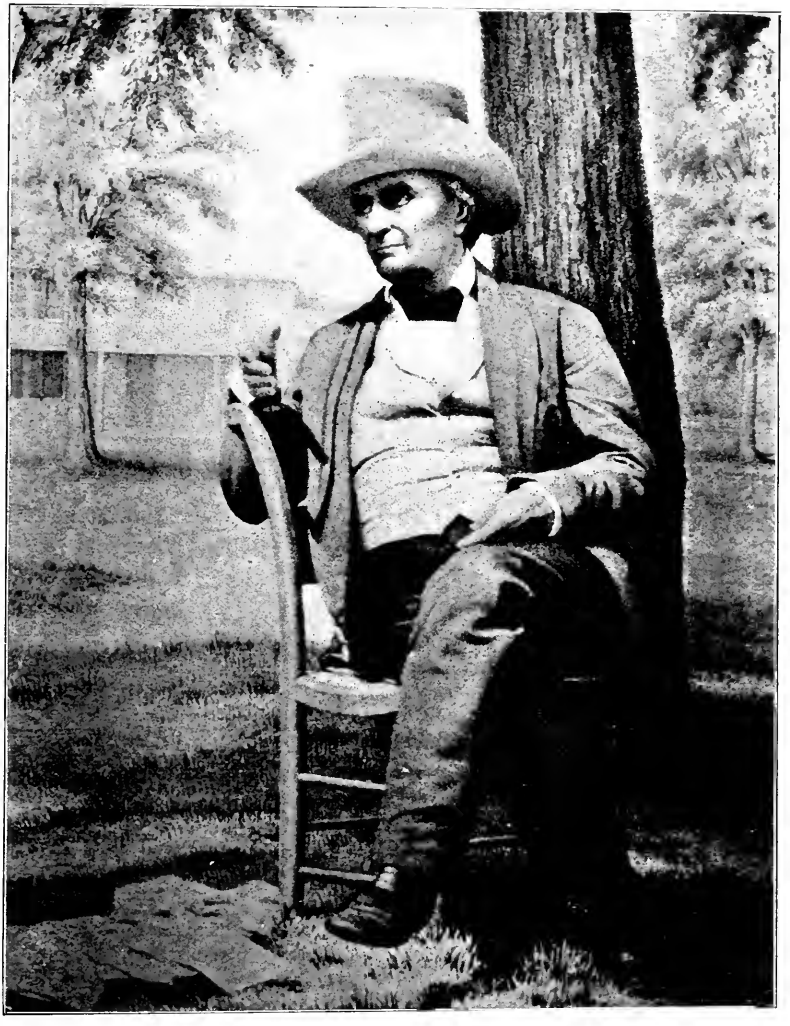
"THE OLD ELM destroyed by a gale Feb. 15, 1876. This elm planted A.D. 1876."

"THE OLD ELM.—This tree has been standing here for an unknown period. It is believed to have existed before the settlement of Boston, being fully grown in 1722; exhibited marks of old age in 1792, and was nearly destroyed by a storm in 1832. Protected by an enclosure in 1854 J. V. C. SMITH, Mayor."



FANEUIL HALL, DOCK SQUARE.

Built in 1763; dedicated, March 14, and completed the same month, on the site of an earlier one built in 1742 and burned on Jan. 13, 1761. Enlarged in 1805 to its present proportions. Rebuilt largely in 1899. The upper hall is the armory of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company. Called also "The Cradle of Liberty"



DANIEL WEBSTER.

As one of the foremost, "Legislators" of Massachusetts (for he was once a member of the Massachusetts Senate) it is eminently proper to place here, close beside the "Old State House," this rare but peculiarly interesting picture of Daniel Webster beneath his favorite tree at his New Hampshire home.

THE OLD STATE HOUSE.

Built in 1748, on site of burned town hall, at the head of State Street Boston.

In the foreground occurred the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770. Been used as State House City Hall, and Post Office. British troops quartered here, 1768, and General Gage held council of war here before battle of Bunker Hill. Declaration of Independence read from balcony in view; from other end Washington reviewed procession in 1789. Here State Constitution planned and ratified. William Lloyd Garrison took refuge here from mob. October, 1835, it being then used for City Hall.
